COLOPHON

Generated by depth-first search over a 155,055-word lexicon.

The lexicon reduced to 135,217 distinct letter-strings, indexed twice — once forward, once reversed. The search carried a single overhang: the letters on one side not yet answered on the other. Every move set a word whose letters either ate into that overhang or ran past it, flipping which side hung over; the text closes only when the overhang is itself palindromic. 514,715 moves were made, of which 37,647 ended in vocabulary from which nothing could follow and were unwound. What survived is 99,995 words drawn from 29,426 distinct forms.

The palindrome was proved three times. Once at generation, stripping case, spacing and punctuation and comparing the letter stream against its own reverse. Once after the text was broken into sentences, paragraphs and chapters. Once on this book, by extracting the text back out of the rendered pages, discarding the running heads, and matching the remaining 482,372 letters character for character against the source. The three agree. The axis falls between letters 241,185 and 241,186, inside a word.
